

The Optimist

Collected Essays 1994-2003

by Howard M. Spiro

The familiar musings of Howard Spiro extol the humanitarian spirit in life and medicine, even as new technologies dominate. His complete essays, published in Science & Medicine since 1994, are collected together in a handsome volume.

Hardbound, 100 pages, $32.00 + $4 shipping, October 2004

Yes, Please send me a copy of *The Optimist Collected Essays!

Name _____

Address _____

More Address _____

City _____ State _____ Zip _____

Postcode _____ Country _____

Tel/fax/or e-mail _____

PAYMENT: $32.00 (plus $4 S&H in US; $6 outside US)

Check enclosed (in US funds, drawn on a US bank) Total $ _____

VISA  MasterCard  Am Ex

Card number _____ Expires _____

Signature _____ Date _____

Mail with payment (in U.S. funds) to Science & Medicine, PO Box 313, Narberth PA 19072, USA.
For credit card orders, phone 800-888-0028 (outside the U.S. and Canada phone 610-660-8097) or fax 610-660-0348, or visit sciandmed.com.

Would Goethe have called for more light if his death had come in an ICU? (1994)

Family practice, now urged on the young, belongs to older doctors, tempered by experience and calmed by life. (1998)

Too much analysis paralyzes thought. (1995)

We doctors should learn far earlier than I did that the old are people still, with hopes and ambitions, and with plans. (2002)

No one studies amusement, empathy, association, recall of minor events, or poetic ability. (1996)

...patients whose chronic pain fills their every moment and who by their caresses of their distress tell us how empty life might be without that pain. (1995)

Food serves important cultural and moral values: what people eat and drink, or do not eat and drink, tells us much about them. (2002)

Little is new, ... old questions always recur, even if in disguise. (2003)

Doubtless the Fall from grace and the expulsion from Eden will be deemed infectious in origin... (1997)